In the course of his concluding remarks, the Chief Minister while emphasising the use of educational institutions for moral rearmament, laid stress on the urgent need for enlightening the rural masses in the initial stages, through lectures and Gamaka recitals on subjects relating to our ancient heritage and culture. He said that the purpose of the Scheme was to improve the moral and ethical standards of the people and create in them a passion for righteousness and ultimately raise the level of national life. The Chief Minister pointed out that by sponsoring the Scheme for literary and cultural development, the State Government had planned for improved ethical life in Mysore to collaborate with the Five-Year Plan for raising the standards of economic life. He added further that a great responsibility had devolved upon the Members of the Central Advisory Council to work out the Scheme and to advice Government on the scope, organisation and implementation thereof and to suggest measures and methods required to honour writers and artists. He felt confident that the Scheme, which looked now like a small rivulet, would become ultimately a mighty river and transform the entire outlook of human life and values. He finally exhorted the members to take a keen interest in the Scheme and develop it in order to achieve the desired objective in view. He requested the Vyavastha Committee to give a practical programme for the next three months so that the Advisory Committee might watch the results and evolve future programmes and work.
